

Bordering Practices in Divided Beirut: A Journey Through the Margins

Beirut, the capital of Lebanon, is a city divided. Its history is marked by a series of violent conflicts, including the Lebanese Civil War (1975-1990), which left the city physically and socially scarred. Even today, Beirut remains a divided city, with its various communities separated by invisible but often heavily policed boundaries.

Bordering Practices in Divided Beirut is an in-depth exploration of the ways in which the city's divisions have shaped its social and spatial landscape. Through a rich ethnography of everyday life, the book examines how people navigate the complex boundaries that separate and connect different communities in Beirut. Drawing on extensive fieldwork, the book provides a nuanced understanding of the social and political dynamics that have shaped the city's built environment and everyday practices. It also offers a unique perspective on the role of boundaries in shaping human experience in urban contexts.
