About the Book

In the groundbreaking work, 'Decolonial Feminist Community Psychology,' Dr. Marcus Deminco presents a paradigm shift in understanding mental health and addressing the needs of marginalized communities. This book challenges the dominant Eurocentric and patriarchal approaches that have historically excluded and oppressed people of color, women, and LGBTQ+ individuals.

Through the lens of decolonization and feminism, Deminco offers a radical framework that empowers communities to define their own well-being and develop culturally responsive practices that promote liberation and social justice. Drawing on case studies, personal narratives, and transformative practices, this book guides readers on a journey towards collective healing and empowerment.

'Decolonial Feminist Community Psychology' is an invaluable resource for practitioners, researchers, and activists working in the fields of mental health, community development, and social justice. It provides a roadmap for dismantling systemic oppression and creating inclusive and equitable communities where everyone can thrive.
