1. Build a strong relationship with your stepchildren. This means spending time with them, getting to know them, and building a bond of trust. It also means being supportive and understanding, and always putting their needs first.
2. Set clear boundaries and expectations. This means letting your stepchildren know what is expected of them and what the consequences will be if they do not meet those expectations. It also means being consistent with your discipline and setting limits that are fair and reasonable.
3. Communicate effectively. This means being open and honest with your stepchildren about your feelings and expectations. It also means listening to what they have to say and being willing to compromise.

Here are some tips on how to implement the easy guaranteed technique:

- Spend time with your stepchildren. Make an effort to spend quality time with your stepchildren every day. This could involve ng activities together, talking to them about their day, or just spending time together as a family.
- Get to know your stepchildren. Take the time to learn about your stepchildren's interests, hobbies, and goals. This will help you build a closer relationship with them and show them that you care about them.
- Be supportive and understanding. Let your stepchildren know that you are there for them and that you support them. Be understanding when they are going through a tough time, and offer your help and support.

- Set clear boundaries and expectations. Let your stepchildren know what is expected of them and what the consequences will be if they do not meet those expectations. Be consistent with your discipline and set limits that are fair and reasonable.
- Communicate effectively. Be open and honest with your stepchildren about your feelings and expectations. Listen to what they have to say and be willing to compromise.
